You may have heard of Kava and wondered what it is. As people have become increasingly interested in the concept of natural remedies and herbs to deal with various conditions and ailments, Kava has become more popular and well known.

So, what is Kava?

Kava, also called Kava-Kava, is a substance that comes from a root native to the South Pacific region. It's been used by native islanders for centuries as a medicinal treatment and also as part of their religious ceremonies.

Kava has been used for more than 3,000 years by Pacific Islanders, and in villages, it's still used during gatherings and social events. Pacific Islanders may use Kava sparingly, or they may partake in a complete Kava ceremony if there is a special occasion. In a Kava ceremony, everyone gathers and shares from a bowl that's kept in the middle of the circle. Now Kava is used all over the world, in fact over 1,000 Kava Bars exist in the USA alone. Kava is now a booming market all over the globe.

The following are some of the primary things to know about Kava: Kava is also known as 'awa and piper methysticum'. It comes from the roots and stems of a small shrub, and it's considered non-alcoholic but psychoactive. It's used in Fiji, Tonga, Vanuatu and Hawaii.

When kava is prepared traditionally, it's done so by putting the root and stem into a sack and then soaking the sack in water. You can then squeeze the juice from the sack into a wooden bowl, and is served as if from a punch bowl.

Kava is said to help with relaxation, but according to people who use it, it doesn't cloud their thoughts. In western culture, Kava has been increasingly looked on as a treatment for anxiety and stress, as well as insomnia. Some research has shown Kava may be as effective as tranquilisers and sleeping pills and medical benzodiazepines.

WHY ARE WE OFFERING YOU THIS RARE OPPORTUNITY?

To produce large amounts of beautiful Kava requires large amounts of fertile land. We have acquired a substantial acreage of the most suitable land, at significant expense, to make sure we produce only the purest Kava available on the market.

Prince Phillip

Kava Plantations must hold vast numbers of Kava plants for between 3 - 5 years and as demand has gone up, this amount continues to grow, to meet the market expectations.

We require cash flow to operate and expand our proven growing system, to meet the increasing demand and to be able to take larger profits. While it is true we could do this all ourselves, partnering with savvy investors grants us the funds to produce the best management program and best results.

By producing more Kava increases supply which increases demand, the circle of success.

When borrowing money to expand, interest and lending costs reduce the net profit, so sourcing the perfect partners not only allows us to grow faster and increase supply, but also increase profits for both parties. This means we can hire the best team, use the best growing systems to speed up production, increase the overall yield and develop the best selling channels.....we all win.

Our system is a bridge between the farmer and the retail buyer or consumer.

VANUATU

The Friendliest Place On Earth

Vanuatu has a long and rich history. Melanesian groups have inhabited the islands since at least 2000BC and, despite around 4000 years of sporadic migration from Polynesians and Europeans, it has been able to hold onto many of its traditional customs and rituals. Vanuatu's culture does vary slightly between the northern, central and southern islands. In the north, status can be purchased and wealth is defined by how much one can give away. In the central and southern islands, status is defined more by position—the title of chief is passed down the family line or awarded based on merit respectively.

European influences didn't arrive in Vanuatu until 1606. Portuguese explorer, Pedro Fernandez de Quiros was the first to reach the islands, but it was Captain James Cook who spurred on settlement in the region. During his late 18th Century exploration he named the islands New Hebrides and European, Samoan, New Caledonian and French missionaries filtered in between the 1830s and the 1860s. Settlers came after this to establish coffee, cocoa, banana and coconut plantations. The infamous 'blackbirding' labour trade that occurred during this time significantly reduced the native Vanuatuan population.

In 1887, Vanuatu was administered by the French-British naval commission. It was divided into the Anglo-French Condominium in 1906 and Melanesians were denied citizenship and power. World War II saw the arrival of American troops to the islands and, while this meant that over 100,000 US defence personnel moved in to occupy Santo, nationalism began to rise. The first political party was established in the 1970s and the independent Republic of Vanuatu followed in 1980.
